A new look for our schools

MEDIA CENTER

School classes have come a long way in the past quarter of a century. Cherry Creek School District has been one of the leading in new school design. Architects have depended upon aluminum rather than walls in defining spaces and where the emphasis has been on function and flexibility. The award-winning Mission View Elementary School plans to investigate. One of its four primary-level classrooms is the private reading hall, the entrance of which is the last of its kind in the world.
